

Effective Engagement with Māori

OVERVIEW

The way government engages with Māori is changing. Future engagement is going to be different from what we have traditionally seen/experienced. The establishment of Te Arawhiti – The Office for Māori Crown Relations, demonstrates the governments' commitment to build strong, ongoing and effective relationships with Māori across all of government. Engagement will go beyond consultation to true partnership.

This two-day workshop is designed to help public servants gain a greater understanding of Te Ao Māori (Māori world view), Te Tiriti o Waitangi, and provides practical tools and techniques for effectively engaging with Māori.

Day one of the workshop has participants building a foundation of historical and cultural knowledge. Day two, has participants using this knowledge to inform their planning for engagement with Māori.

Te Reo (Māori language) and Tikanga (Māori protocols) will be weaved through the workshop across the two days.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

This introductory workshop is designed for public servants who want to build their knowledge and confidence for working in partnership with Māori. Including;

- Improving their understanding of the Te Ao Māori and Te Tiriti o Waitangi.
- Building their knowledge and skills for consulting and engaging with Māori.

WORKSHOP PRESENTER

Piripi Winiata – Rongomaiwahine, Ngāti Kahungunu

Piripi is a director at Kawea Law and Consultancy. Piripi is a lawyer by background and has experience in strategy, policy, implementation and kaupapa Māori work. Piripi recently finished leading a team established to drive the Crown Māori relations strategy at Te Tūāpapa Kura Kāinga – the Ministry for Housing and Urban Development. The role involved developing an organisational understanding of its commitment to Te Tiriti o Waitangi, building internal Crown Māori relations capability and leading the organisation’s iwi and Māori engagement.

Piripi was previously a Senior Consultant at Te Amokura Consultants (Te Amokura). While at Te Amokura, among other pieces of work, Piripi supported the development of strategies and work programmes aimed at improving Māori engagement across the public sector.
